BRILLIANT COLORS ON NEW COATS.

BY ANNE RUTENHOUSE.

Special Correspondence of The Star.
NEW YORK, February 21.—If you have a sweater of which you are especially fond it is possible that you can match the material and make a skirt of it. Doesn't that strike you as being a rather delightful way of obtaining a street suit for the spring?

However, be well assured that it is not a simple matter to match the ma-others of the hour, has been adopted from the fashions of Louis Philippe. The new coats are broken at the waist line, especially when they are made of jersey cloth, but a kind of military sash has taken the place of the military belt. It goes around the figure twice, and its ends loop over and hang at the side of the front.

SAGO USEFULNESS.

Sago can be made one of the most generally useful ingredients in the pantry, if the cook is resourceful. A little of it softened and added to soup adds smoothness and richness, and it can be added in the same way to sauces and gravies.

Sago and apple pudding is made in this way: Pare and core eight large tart apples, soak a cupful of sago in enough cold water to cover, pour over the apples, sweeten to taste, and bake until firm.

Dumplings of tapioca for soup are a novelty in many households. To make them, boil sago in a double boiler in milk until it is thick and clear. Let it cool and turn it into balls about the size of a hickory nut. Dip the balls in beaten egg and put them in a tureen or else put four or five in each soup plate. Pour the hot soup over them and serve at once. The soup should be literally boiling hot, as it is depended on to cook the outside of the balls.

Sago and vegetable pie can be made in this way and will prove a very good meat substitute for luncheon. Indeed, it is one of those fabled dishes that are made in themselves. To make it, soak a cupful of sago over night in water. The next day, slice carrots, onions, turnips, celery and tomatoes—or use canned tomatoes. Fill a deep dish with layers of the mixed vegetables alternating with the soaked sago. Moisten with stock and cover with a good rich crust. Bake rather slowly until brown and serve very hot.

LITTLE STORIES for BEDTIME

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS.

(Copyright, 1916, by J. G. Lloyd.)

Poor, Poor Mrs. Grouse.

It's dreadful things that some people will do! I can't see why any one loves them; can you?

Poor, poor Mrs. Grouse! Was ever any one in worse trouble? There she hung by one leg from a wire fastened to a little tree. It was a snare, which, you know, is a kind of trap, and one of the meanest of all traps. Had she poked her head through the little opening in the brush fence she would have been caught by the neck. The little wire loop which had been carefully placed there would have slipped around her neck and choked her to death, and by this time she would have been hanging cold and stiff from the little tree.

It would have been a dreadful way to have life end, but it would have been a quick ending. She would hardly have known what had happened. But she didn't poke her head through that little loop of wire. Instead, she stepped in another little loop cunningly spread in the snow and now she was hanging head down from that little tree which had been bent over and had snapped up straight when she had pulled that little wire around her leg. It had snatched her up in the air with it, the wire cutting into her leg cruelly.

But it wasn't the pain of this from which Mrs. Grouse suffered most. Indeed, she hardly felt it at all. It was the terror of being helpless and wondering what dreadful thing would happen to her. Many, many times had Mrs. Grouse been terribly frightened, for she had many narrow escapes from those who had hunted her, but with her right always had been the feeling that she could escape if only she used her wits. Her wits, her legs and her stout wings she had been free to use excepting once when she was caught under an icy crust which had formed over her while she slept. That time she had felt something of the same helplessness and hopelessness until Farmer Brown's boy had found her and set her free, and yet it had not been as bad then as now, for under that crust starvation was all she had to fear. None of her enemies could find her then. But now, supposing Farmer Brown's boy should find her tonight when Hooley the Owl began hunting? He would be sure to find her. If neither of them found her she might hang there until she starved to death, or, worse still, the terrible creature who had set that snare should find her. Poor Mrs. Grouse! She beat her wings until she was so tired that she could hardly move them, but all it did was to tighten that wire around her leg. Big tears filled her eyes as she hung head down panting for breath. The Jolly Little Sun beams came stealing through the Green Forest, making it very beautiful in its cloak of pure white snow. But there was no beauty in it for Mrs. Grouse. They found her hanging there, and then they stole away from that place, for there was nothing there that they could do to help her. They thought she was dead, and they closed her eyes. She could hear to look out on this little part of her world where she had been so happy in spite of all its dangers.

"What can I do? What can I do?" she moaned.

"There is nothing you can do," replied a voice.

She opened her eyes. There, looking up at her, was Freddy Fox and though there was hunger and longing in his eyes there was also sorrow and pity.

LITTLE JOURNEYS INTO FASHION LAND

The time has come for spring and summer kimono. Happily they are a little more ample than formerly, in conformity with the modes of the day. Heavy, winter wrappers are being aired and packed away in camphor-sprinkled paper and sheets.

Of all kimono patterns, none is easier to make or sets more gracefully in the back than that illustrated here. The yoke and sleeves are cut in one piece, with a seam in the middle of the back, and open in front. The collar and cuffs are made of plain pink cotton crepe, and a cord of the same makes an attractive little fold around the seam of the yoke. The rest of the garment is cut from pink cotton crepe, over which is etched a dainty floral design in deeper pink, white and those fine black lines that the orientals know so well how to use effectively. Such a kimono always looks beautiful with a lingerie collar and cuffs, or with a ruffle of white in the sleeves. Try making collar and cuffs of simple dotted swiss and see how lovely the effect will be. Just add a narrow ruffle, or one of valenciennes lace, or plain white net, and you cannot imagine how charming you will look.

A great many women are making their spring kimonos of yellow and lemon colored oriental cotton crepe or printed silks, both of which are cheap, but you will find more satisfaction in blues, pink, reds and the beautiful lilac shades, which are plentiful. Only a few women look well in yellow kimono. Many others do not wear color in a washable negligee. Chiffons and fine fancy silks of yellow with rich trimmings and veiling of gauzes

TODAY'S HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS.

BY MARY LEE.

Here are recipes which may have in them that element of the unexpected we have mentioned as a stimulator of appetite. Macaroni and oysters are not often combined, but they are unusually adaptable.

Cook three-quarters of a cup of rice in boiling salted water until soft. Drain; pour over one quart of boiling water, and let stand until cool and dry. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in hot skillet and toss rice in it until slightly browned, stirring lightly with fork. Put in hot serving dish; pour over one cup of hot tomato sauce and sprinkle with one-half cup grated cheese, lifting rice and mixing. Let tomato and cheese may coat each kernel.

Parched Rice With Tomato Sauce.

Cook half a pound of macaroni in salted water until very tender. Drain well a quart of oysters which have been rinsed in cold water, after pouring off their own juice. Drain this juice through a cheesecloth. Put into the baking dish a tablespoonful of butter, then a layer of the macaroni, alternating with a layer of oysters until the dish is filled. Have chopped together until very fine, one small onion, one green sweet pepper, from which the seeds and partition walls have been removed, two or three stalks of celery and a sprig of parsley. These should be mixed together and the layers of macaroni sprinkled with them. Each layer should be dotted with bits of butter and seasoned with salt and pepper. When the dish is ready for the oven pour over it first the oyster liquor and then a cupful of rich milk or cream.
